Notes

Casting Quality

Koshka is definitely a break away cap for Death Caps. Moving away from the simple cross design, the casting quality is extremely high on this sculpt with extensive detailing, intricate line work, and a multitude of shots with only the slightest color bleed of grey into the right eye. Overall this is an incredibly well made artisan that any collector would dream of owning.

Complexity

Digging further into the details past the Casting Quality notes, serious effort was taken as to the knitting pattern on Koshka's cap as well as the serious amounts of effort in detailing the fur. While not immediately complex, the closer one looks the more complex this cap is.

Texturing

Aside the previous praises in regards to quality and attention to the detail, the texturing on this cap is downright incredible. Every single component of this sculpt is not only perfectly textured to feeling but also to the eyes. This is truly an incredibly well done texturing job.

Stem Fit/Butt

With solid alignment on the stem and a fairly basic butt, the only issue that I really had in reviewing this switch is the expectation that I should somehow ascertain a score for a cat butt? Isn't this the kind of thing that riles up PETA on social media?

Other

Taking a bold step into delivering something in the realm of resin-realism, Death Caps really knocked this sculpt and cap out of the park while still bringing through just enough motifs and details that make this identifiably their work. An extremely incredible work not only for Death Caps, but for any collector.
